Lily of Blythenhale Andro Semeiko

A new exhibition at the Acme Project Space nods to medieval Bethnal Green when the area was little more than forest and swamp known as Blythenhale. Jessica Wilkes Award holder Andro Semeiko's Lily of Blythenhale tells a story about little princess Lily who finds a dragon's tooth in the forest...; introduces noble knight Simon de Montfort, forefather of parliamentary democracy, who inherits the forest and creates a secret society called Lily of Blythenhale...; uncovers the history of a brush factory, that stood on the very spot where the current gallery is located, producing combs for an unusual ritual...

Lily of Blythenhale provides viewers with a humorous way of exploring the past as a means of analysing the present. It creates a space in which to explore our attitudes towards knowledge and power and in doing so, satirises our straightforward beliefs in achieving progress.

The exhibition is constructed as a multilayered visual story told through painting, drawing, sculpture and archival material working as props for a mise-en-scène. Each object in the show balances on the edge of being an illustration from the story, and an unconnected entity in its own right. The exhibition creates a space where the view shifts between harmonious construct and random assemblage.

As Andro explains, 'In small theatre productions props are often reused for the next show, where they take on a new function and meaning yet still maintain elements of their previous purpose. These layers of meaning create their sense of mystery. Works in this show are constructed as reused props finding their 'layers of dust' from the history, legends and architecture of the gallery building and the local area.'

Andro Semeiko is the third recipient of the Jessica Wilkes Award; a major professional development opportunity established by Acme Studios and Jessica's family and friends to celebrate the life of former Acme tenant Jessica Wilkes who died in 2006. The year-long award provides an artist with a free studio and grant to enable them to devote more of their time to their studio practice. The award, worth £10,000, is made to an artist selected from applications from current Acme studio tenants.

Notes for editors

The Acme Project Space provides an important opportunity for artists on our Residency, Awards & Community Programme to test ideas, present work and engage in a critical dialogue with a wider audience. This project space is not a gallery with a curated programme, but rather a significant additional resource for a major programme which provides over 30 selected artists each year with rent-free studios, bursaries and professional support.

Founded by Jonathan Harvey and David Panton in 1972, Acme Studios is a London-based charity that provides artists with affordable studios and living space, residencies and awards. Acme manages 425 studios in 12 buildings across London.
